She was preceded in death by her sister, Sally Roe, and her brother, George Russell.

Kay devoted her life to her family and home, finding joy in cooking, gardening, and long walks from her home to the shores of Lake Huron. She enjoyed welcoming friends and visitors through the J & K retail store she once owned with her husband in beloved downtown Lexington. She also cherished adventures alongside her husband as a team truck driver across the United States.

Never one to shy away from excitement, Kay even took airplane flying lessons — a reflection of her adventurous, fearless, and feisty spirit.

She touched the life of everyone who had the blessing of knowing her. She will be sorrowfully missed, but her love and light will remain with us always.

A celebration of life will be determined at a later date.

“ *My mom made me sometimes smile
And sometimes when I fall she always picked Me up and hugged and though we had some good times and some bad days but I still loved. My mom even though it*
