“Michael was my childhood buddy and best friend. I have warm memories of time we spent together exploring, having adventures, and just enjoying being outdoors together. While we grew apart as we got to high school age, Mike stayed a loyal friend, and drove me to school every day with the car he worked so hard to purchase at a young age. Even though we spent little time together during high school and later, I never lost my affection for him and my fond memories. After he returned to Michigan, and was ill, I visited him once. One of my most painful regrets is my failure to visit him more than that. He was important to me. He was a good human being who is missed. I think of him often.
